SUMMARY

~~CONTENTS~~MILITARY DEVELOPMENTS:

Three independent clandestine sources have reported on the unloading of military equipment from the Soviet vessel METALLURG BAIKOV in Havana harbor on 19 or 20 November. (Page 1)

Soviet "coastal defense rockets" now belong to Cuban Army artillery forces, according to a recent speech by Raul Castro; however, Soviets still appear to be involved in the communications net which serves the cruise missile system. (Page 1)

FIDEL CASTRO'S SPEECH:

In a 6-7 December speech devoted mainly to education, Castro digressed to discuss the situation resulting from Venezuela's charge that the arms cache discovered on a Venezuelan beach last month had come from Cuba. Castro implied that the arms had been planted by CIA and are being used as a pretext for new action by the "imperialists and their lackeys" against Cuba. He expressed confidence that whatever the result, the Cuban revolution will not be defeated. (Page 2)

CUBAN INTERNAL SITUATION:

Faure Chomón Mediavilla is replacing Omar Fernandez as transportation minister; Major Jesus Montane Oropesa will be new communications minister. (Page 3)

MILITARY DEVELOPMENTS.

~~CUBAN SUPPORT OF INTERNAL SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES:~~

Three independent clandestine sources have reported the unloading of military equipment from a Soviet cargo vessel, probably the METALLURG BAIKOV, on 19 or 20 November. This vessel was suspected of carrying a military cargo long before its arrival in Cuba. (See Daily Summary of 12 November.) It carried what was probably the eighth full military cargo to arrive in Cuba since the 1962 missile crisis. One source, a retired civil engineer whose reporting has been factual and in most instances based on personal observation, reported that the METALLURG BAIKOV unloaded "large quantities of arms and military equipment" in Havana on 20 November and left the next day. Another source reported that Havana longshoremen had stated that a Soviet ship, which they did not identify, had unloaded arms at Regla Wharf, Havana, on 20 November. A third source, an educated Cuban of Western European extraction who is a resident of Havana, reported that tanks were among the equipment unloaded from a Soviet vessel that arrived in Havana on 19 November. The three sources are probably referring to the same shipment. If the report on the delivery of tanks is true, this would be the second consecutive reported shipment of armored vehicles to Cuba. The ORENBURG reportedly delivered some 45 tanks on 23 or 24 October. (See Daily Summaries of 28 and 29 October.) It has previously been reported that another probable military shipment, the ninth, is now en route aboard the SLUTSK. (See Daily Summary of 3 December.) (CIA TDCS-DE-3/658,289, 6 December, ~~SECRET NO FOREIGN DISSEM/CONTROLLED DISSEM~~)

The Soviet "coastal defense rockets" now belong to the Cuban Army artillery forces, according to a recent speech by Raul Castro. Cubans probably have been training in cruise missile operations since last spring, and the rotation and withdrawal of some Soviet naval personnel in September suggested that the cruise missile system was turned over to the Cubans at that time. A Soviet communications net which probably serves the cruise missile system remains active, however, indicating that some degree of Soviet involvement continues. This vessel was suspected of carrying a military cargo long before its arrival in Cuba. (See Daily Summary of 12 November.) It carried what was probably the eighth military cargo to arrive in Cuba since the 1962 missile crisis. One source, a retired civil engineer whose reporting has been factual and in most instances based on personal observation, reported that Castro stated that, while the imperialists and their lackeys charge that Cuba is promoting subversion in Venezuela, rebellion and subversion cannot be promoted from without. The Venezuelan revolution, he maintained, stems from the Venezuelan people's own dispute with their government and with its permitting the "imperialists" to plunder Venezuela's wealth and resources. If subversion could, in fact, be promoted from the outside, why he asked, have all the resources of imperialism failed to subvert the Cuban Government?

Betancourt, "that miserable lackey," is trying to incite the United States to take military action against Cuba, Castro charged. As a pretext the Venezuelans say they have discovered arms from Cuba on the Venezuelan coast, Castro stated. "Some 45 tanks on 23 or 24 October. (See Daily Summaries of 28 and 29 October.) It has previously been reported that another probable military shipment, the NIKHIN, is now en route aboard the SULTAN. (See Daily Summary of 5 December.) (CIA ID#S-DB-37558 284 5 December, SECRET NO FOREIGN DISSEM/CONTROLLED DISSEM.)

The Soviet coastal defense rockets now belong to the Cuban Army artillery forces, according to a recent speech by Paul Castro. Cubans probably have been training in Cuban missile operations since last spring and the rotation and re-enravelling of some Soviet naval personnel in September suggested that the cruise missile system was turned over to the Cubans at that time. A Soviet communications net which previously served the cruise missile system remains active, however, indicating that some degree of Soviet involvement continues. (CIA FBIS, 14 November UNCLASSIFIED AND NSA 2-A 141001Z-63, 28 August, 1963, SECRET KIMMIE)

Castro then attempted to show the "brazenness" and inconsistency of those who would use the Venezuelan arms cache as a pretext to invade or to blockade Cuba when for more than four years the very same kind of subversive activity as is now being charged to Cuba has been perpetrated against Cuba--without any hemispheric attempt to punish the aggressors.

"Things have changed quite a bit," Castro declared, "to attack or to blockade Cuba now would not be easy; we can defend ourselves; we are calm; we know what we have to defend ourselves with." Then, in an implied reference to the Soviet equipment of strategic missiles to Cuba last year, Castro declared: "Then we hear some of these lackeys of imperialism talking so calmly about invading Cuba, when it has been only one year since the October crisis, they are once more proving us right and are once more justifying Cuba's taking defensive measures; this talk led to the October crisis." Castro then declared that "these men are so deceived by their own propaganda that...they cannot conceive of what any invader would meet here." A war against Cuba, he said, "would not end while there was a single mercenary soldier treading on our soil."

Castro then returned briefly to his views as to how peace can be assured in the Caribbean. "Whatever they want to discuss with Cuba," he said, "let them come and discuss honestly with Cuba, because we have stated the indispensable prerequisites for a peaceful atmosphere...in the Caribbean." Thus far, however, they have answered with aggressions on top of aggressions. "This course," he said, "is doomed to failure." (CIA PALS Havana, 5 December, OFFICIAL USE ONLY) recoilless gun, Cuban mortars perchance? No! Yankee mortars!

Yankee bazookas! Yankee recoilless cannon! Arms which we did not manufacture; arms which we did not buy!" Castro then went on without specifically denying that the weapons had come from Cuba, by implying that the CIA had obtained Cuban arms from Cuba, by means of agents who would not be difficult to plant there, weapons in Venezuela. (Here he is obviously referring to the Belgian-made light rifles and submachineguns which have been identified as among those shipped to Cuba in 1959 and 1960.) With respect to the US-made mortars, bazookas, and re-coilless rifles, Castro challenged the OAS investigating committee to "investigate thoroughly" take laboratory tests to trace the serial numbers, and then "they will be able to reach only one conclusion: that they belong to the CIA."

Montane took part in the attack on the Moncada Barracks in 1953 and followed Castro to exile in Mexico. He took part in the GRANMA expedition of 1956 when he was captured and imprienced. After the revolution, he reportedly received only a minor post in the government because he had talked too much in prison. More than half their transmitters had been destroyed, the only shelters and command posts closest to the units reporting having had suffered serious damage; and divisional headquarters reported that while its facilities were still in good condition, the roads leading to it will have to be repaired. The committee members, the ambassador stated, insisted that it is essential for the Venezuelan Government to "present proof of the general Cuban conspiracy" against the Venezuelan Government if the case against Cuba is to be proven. The [redacted] ambassador added that "one of the most important members of the committee" had stated that the Venezuelan evidence on the Cuban origin of the arms cache is not airtight and that the arms could actually have been resold by Cuba to someone else some years ago or stolen from Cuban arms at the [redacted] gate and the others of whom he speaks are apparently unaware that considerable effort had in fact been made to erase all evidence of a "very important US magazine" had asked him in all seriousness on 6 December whether the arms could not have been planted in Venezuela by the CIA as Castro has charged. The editor identifying marks recently found on Venezuelan technicians, using a highly technical process, were able to identify [redacted] and the Cuban shield on one of the weapons. In independent tests of techniques were used to raise the suspicion and shielding on three of these weapons. The numbers correspond to those of weapons known to have been delivered to Cuba from Belgium in 1959 and 1960. Similarly, in the case of the US light automatic rifles of British manufacture found in the cache, all identifying marks had been obliterated. In this case, one-round inch of British brazing wire had been used to cover the places where the numbers had been ground off. If it was not possible to restore the numbers, however, Venezuelan military authorities have noted that these weapons are unique to those manufactured expressly for the Cuban Government by Belgium's fabrique Nationale in 1959, when Cuba ordered 22,500 such weapons. The Foreign Ministry informed him that he was to "avoid any attitude which might seem to leave Brazil isolated in a position expressing certain misgivings as to the attitude of the Soviet Union towards the investigating committee with respect to the charges against the Castro regime which the committee was named to investigate. The [redacted] ambassador reported that Venezuela had received a strictly confidential telegram from the Foreign Ministry within the committee. His pre-departure "until the situation is clarified" (NSA 3/0 T206-63, 6 December, ~~TOP SECRET DINAR~~) was that it must investigate the entire subject of Cuban subversive activities in Venezuela, not limiting itself to the evidence on the Cuban origin of the arms cache found in Venezuela last month.

Fidel Castro may have been in Moscow about 15 November for talks with Premier Khrushchev, according to a civil aviation expert who is apparently passing on a rumor he heard in Cuba. The source reported as background that Castro has not appeared on Cuban TV and did not meet people he apparently would have met if he had been in Cuba.

The Cubans are reportedly involved in the serious political crisis now under way in Bolivia, where a split between President Paz' section of the governing party and the leftist sector led by Vice President Lechin threatens serious civil disorder. Cuban Chargé Lasalle has given two boxes of arms to leaders of the left section of the party for use in the Catavi-Siglo mining area, according to information received by a clandestine source. The source, a medium-level member of the left section of the governing party who has excellent contact with national leaders of that section and who is apparently trusted by Lasalle, was given this information by a Bolivian labor leader who added that he had personally received the arms from Lasalle. The source reports that the arms are of German origin and had been stored in Lasalle's house in La Paz. (CIA DD/P La Paz, IN 76093, 8 December, SECRET)

Two unnamed Cubans are reportedly with a group of 18 members of the Peruvian Army of National Liberation (ELN) who are currently hiding in Bolivia, according to a usually reliable medium-level member of the Peruvian Movement of the Revolutionary Left (MIR) who is in regular contact with MIR leaders. The members of the ELN may have been returning from training in Cuba, since several such groups from that movement have gone there in the past. According to Gonzalo Fernandez Gasco, leader of the MIR, his group will help them return to Peru by providing them with the necessary documentation. In return, the weapons owned by the ELN--automatic weapons and "San Cristobal" carbines--will be turned over to the MIR, reportedly in accordance with an order from Fidel Castro. Once the ELN youths are back in Peru, the MIR will look after them and try to convert them to the cause. The object is to eliminate the ELN as a rival force.
